Why Metal Sides

Why are Metal Sided Trailers Better?

A simple search of "RV delamination" in any internet search engine will return a list of significant and expensive damage done to campers with fiberglass walls by the intrusion of water to the side-wall causing plywood and adhesives to let go resulting in blistering of the skin. This is referred to as delamination. There are no easy repairs to this type of problem and the resulting depreciation to the value of the camper can cause lasting financial issues.

Traditionally manufactured trailers offer manageable solutions to this issue. Should water enter the wall of a Riverside Travel Trailer the metal siding can be easily removed, any damage repaired, and the metal reinstalled. In addition, here are some other benefits to traditional manufacturing:

- * Wood framing offers insulation, hollow aluminum does not.
- * Metal siding is painted much like an automobile and does not fade. Fiberglass fades with age.
- * Metal can be purchased in multiple colors improving the exterior looks. Fiberglass panels are only one color and stickers or paint added for color.
- * Metal has "ridges" which provide lateral lines that improves the look of the trailer. Fiberglass is smooth often showing panel seams.
- * Metal allows for blocking to be added to the wall for aftermarket accessories should you wish to add items at a later date. Fiberglass walls cannot be altered.

* Wood frame, metal sided units allow for flex. Fiberglass units under stress can crack.
