2026 TRAVEL TRAILERS

A PERFECT DESIGN PAIR

The Airstream Frank Lloyd Wright Usonian Limited Edition Travel Trailer brings together two icons of American design in an Airstream travel trailer that's unlike anything on the road today. Pushing the iconic Airstream mystique to the next level in style and innovation, it delivers unparalleled charm, the instantly recognizable riveted Airstream exterior shape, and an interior informed by the singular work of American architect Frank Lloyd Wright. Designed in partnership with the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation, only 200 of these numbered Limited Editions will be built over the next two years – making it a collector's item that will be cherished for generations while delivering one incredible travel experience after another.

Incorporating the driving philosophy, modern style, and commitment to the natural world shared by these two icons of American design, this 28-foot travel trailer features numerous touchpoints that capture the essence of Wright's best-known works and provides travel comfort and unique features never before seen in an Airstream trailer. The living area quickly converts from dinette to desk to secondary sleeping space, complete with Wright-inspired chairs and a stool that tuck away from sight when not in use. A beautiful custom slatted ceiling fixture runs the length of the ceiling, casting light and shadow throughout the interior. Wood accordion doors featuring Wright's signature use of piano hinges conceal appliances and storage spaces. And a Rear Hatch in the primary sleeping area blends indoor and outdoor in front of twin beds that convert at the push of a button into a king-sized bed.

Meet the Airstream Frank Lloyd Wright Usonian Limited Edition Travel Trailer – and start dreaming of your next Airstream adventure.

TWO ICONS OF DESIGN

Though they likely never met, Airstream founder Wally Byam and pioneering American architect Frank Lloyd Wright helped define the modern aesthetic at home and on the road. After designing and building his first travel trailers in the late 1920s, Wally Byam went on to create aerodynamic riveted aluminum Airstreams that became synonymous with travel adventure and American exploration, with an iconic style that was both timeless and modern. At the same time, Frank Lloyd Wright reshaped the concept of American architecture, with designs that eschewed the heavy European style in favor of minimalist designs informed by Eastern traditions and a dedication to blending the human-built world with the distinctive environments of the United States. Wright's concept of "organic architecture" sought to situate his creations perfectly within the landscape, while Byam sought to let you take your home with you and place your doorstep in the perfect location for exploring the world around you. While they differed in specifics, each explored innovative shapes and materials that improved the experiences of those who lived in their unique spaces.

With the Airstream Frank Lloyd Wright Usonian Limited Edition, design enthusiasts and travel adventurers can have the best of both worlds: A beautifully designed travel trailer that will take you out into the American landscape to discover the magic and mystery that's just over the horizon.

MEET THE FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT®

USONIAN LIMITED EDITION TRAVEL TRAILER

Drawing from numerous touchpoints from across Wright's 70-year architectural career, the design language inside this Limited Edition leans heavily into Wright's Usonian period. Seeking to separate North American design language – specifically that of the United States – from the greater “American” region that included Central and South America, Wright's Usonian concepts were created with everyday people in mind. Featuring modular designs with convertibility at heart, Usonian principles sought to optimize user experience in the home.

Working hand-in-hand with the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation, Airstream's engineering and design teams incorporated elements from across Wright's career. The front living area converts quickly from desk to dinette to secondary sleeping area. The center of the trailer echoes Wright's use of compression and release. Twin beds (which also provide a comfortable lounge area) can be easily converted into a comfortable king-sized bed, and offer a versatile and practical solution for various sleep arrangements.

USONIAN DESIGN AND CONVERTIBLE SPACES

Wright's Usonian design manifests most apparently in a convertible main living space with an emphasis on form and function. The space converts quickly from dinette table with seating for up to four to a narrow desk area in front of large picture windows that looks out on the landscape. Two chairs and a stool easily store inside the modular furniture cabinet built into the roadside wall of the main lounge. When the dinette and desk are stowed, the area opens, allowing the pull-out sofa to extend into a secondary sleeping space.

In the primary sleeping area, two twin beds let you lounge, read, or enjoy the view during the day from bench seating, complete with custom bolsters that add extra support while sitting. At night, two push buttons power the twin beds to slide automatically inward forming a width-spanning king-sized bed.

BRINGING THE OUTSIDE IN: THE GORDON LEAF PATTERN

Wright's dedication to "organic architecture" meant situating his designs within the natural landscape of his selected site. From the babbling streams running through a building and the picture-window views of the outside world, to his selected color palette and use of geometric designs drawn from nature, Wright incorporated numerous natural touchpoints in all his designs. Drawing on the deep well of insight provided by the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation, the Airstream design team incorporated the nature-derived Gordon Leaf Pattern throughout the interior of the travel trailer.

Elizabeth Gordon was the editor of House Beautiful Magazine from 1941 to 1964, she commissioned Wright to remodel the bedroom of her Dobbs Ferry, NY estate. Wright called on his personal secretary and mural designer, Eugene Masselink, to handle the project. In addition to wrangling Wright's many projects, Masselink had an extraordinary talent for creating geometric patterns inspired by natural elements. His work was incorporated into many Wright sites in the form of wall murals and mural screens, as well as the design literature created by Wright's Taliesin Fellowship. For Elizabeth Gordon's bedroom, Masselink created an inspired geometric leaf pattern for a room screen that extended into the carpet.

Inspired by Wright's use of interior decorative elements that harmonize with his overall structures, the Gordon Leaf Pattern was selected for its magnificent curves mirrored throughout the travel trailer. It's most apparent on the interior of the main entry door, where earth tones blend the natural and human-made worlds. The screen door is die-cut in the same geometric pattern, allowing the colors to show through when the main entry door is closed and casting sun-lit patterns of light and shadow when the main entry door is open. Elsewhere, the Gordon Leaf Pattern shows up in the galley wall laminate and the lighting sconces in the end caps, as well as in the cut-out pulls on the cabinets and appliance enclosures.

WRIGHT'S HALLMARKS INSIDE THIS LIMITED EDITION

In addition to the convertible and small space Usonian influences, this Limited Edition Airstream also brings together many of Wright's most common design touchpoints.

Wright always sought to blend interior and exterior to create a seamless experience and expansive sense of space inside his homes and buildings. Here, the line between outside and inside is blurred by the inclusion of Airstream's popular Rear Hatch feature. A gull-wing door that spans the height and width of the travel trailer's rear opens to the primary sleeping area – a first for Airstream, as this space usually connects to the primary lounge. Pull down the mesh screen and enjoy the breeze and the view while lounging on the twin beds or resting on the convertible king-sized bed.

Elsewhere, Wright's dedication to compression and release are on full display. Throughout his designs, narrow passageways open to expansive areas with an exhalation of energy. In the Airstream, one travels from the front to the rear of the trailer via a narrow corridor formed by the fridge cabinet and wardrobe on one side and the lavatory on the other. Leaving the open area at the front, your perspective is forced inward through the narrow space which expands as you enter the rear sleeping area, and vice versa.

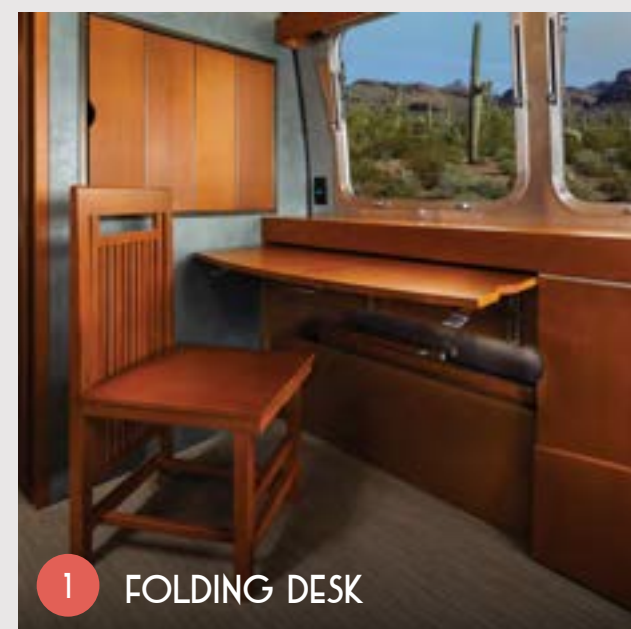

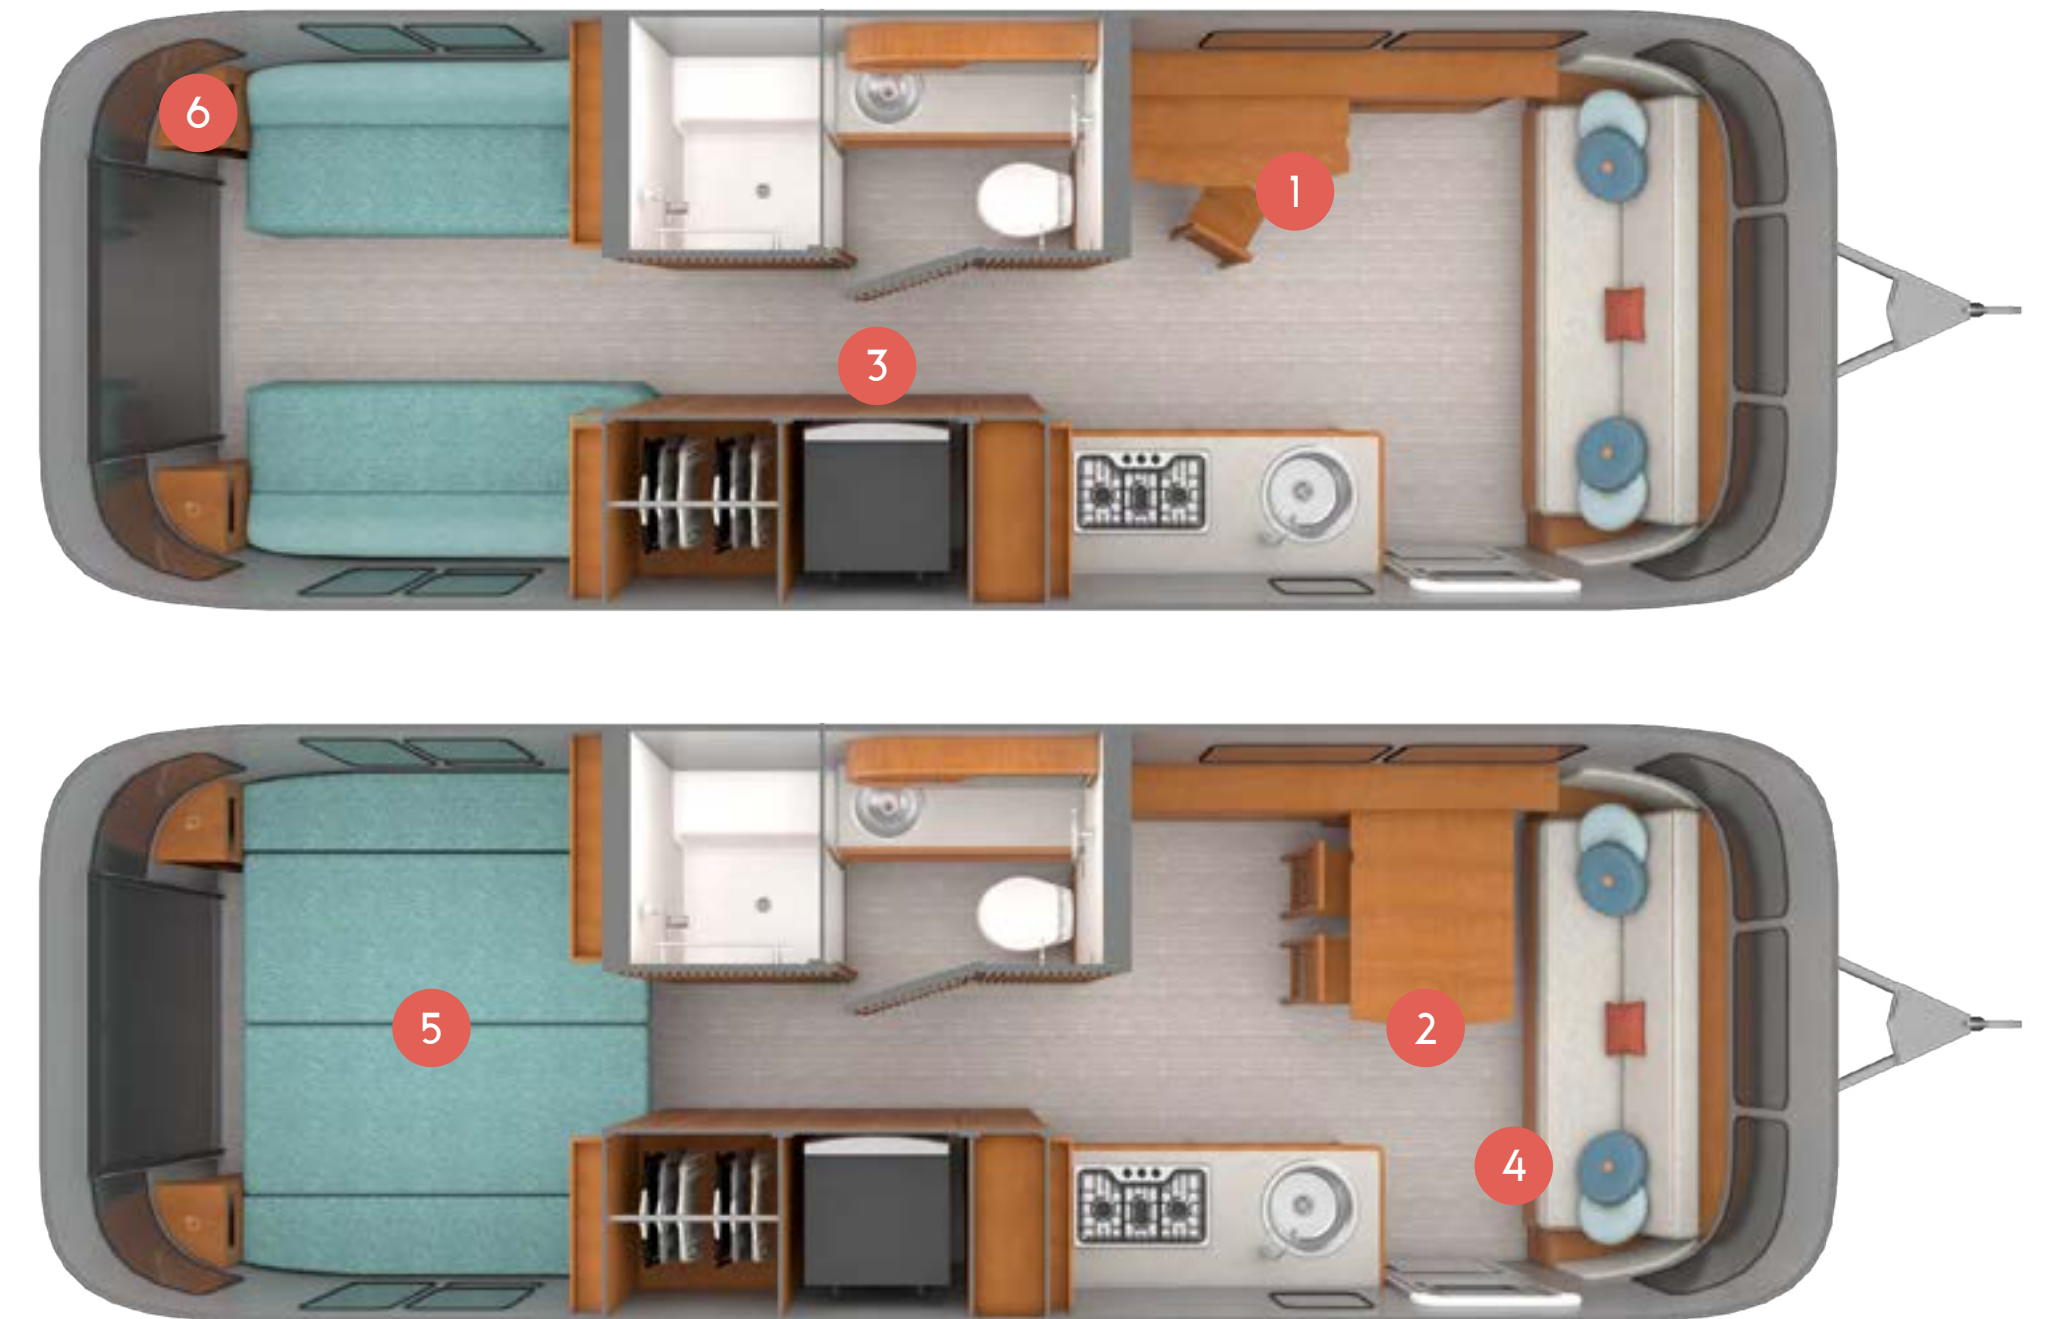

Wright's incorporation of low seating that maximizes the view is channeled through more than twenty-nine windows and skylights. Wide picture windows look out on the landscape while vista view windows above let in natural light. Shadows scatter across the interior while preserving privacy when the panoramic window coverings are drawn. A unique porthole window is incorporated into both the lavy as well as the main door. On the exterior, a wide awning in a lightly heathered cream tone echoes the canvas rooftops Wright used at his winter home at Taliesin West in Scottsdale, Arizona – the home of the Frank Lloyd Wright Foundation.

THE FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT USONIAN LIMITED EDITION FLOOR PLAN

This Limited Edition is numbered and only 200 units will be manufactured over the course of the next two years. It features a single, 28-foot rear bed floor plan that puts the main living space (and a secondary sleeping area) at the front of the trailer. The mid-section echoes Wright’s use of compression and release via a narrow passage that opens into the rear sleeping area. The primary king-sized sleeping space is positioned in front of the Rear Hatch and easily converts into twin beds or a spacious lounge area with bench seating. To enhance versatility, the setup includes tailored slipcovers and quilted coverlets that allow for a seamless transition from a restful sleeping environment to a stylish entertaining space. Supportive bolsters provide comfort whether lounging or hosting, creating a true dual-purpose retreat.
